“Magic Swallow” is the sequel to “Do Swallows Sing Love Songs.” It is the story of a pretty, dark-haired psychiatric nurse named Lucy Hatfield who works at her Aunt Moira’s mental health facility in San Juan Capistrano. The place has a dude ranch atmosphere. On Lucy’s days off, she is a volunteer ranger. One morning she finds a man lying in the mud, his horse cropping weeds nearby. She can see the man is very frustrated over being thrown from the animal. He explains the horse tripped on a tree root and he’s anxious to be on his way, if only he could mount. He has apparently injured his ankle. She wants to examine him before giving him a hand. They argue. She wins. Several days later, when she’d returned to work, the new psychologist arrived. Lucy is shocked to see it’s the same man. When he recognizes her, he apologizes for his behavior. She decides to keep their relationship purely professional. Her uncle and aunt throw her a birthday party at the local beach and the new ‘shrink’ attends. Lucy sees a different side of him. He gives her a tiny hand-carved swallow and she’s touched by the gift—one of her favorite things. But this doesn’t changer her resolve. He’s charming and handsome, which leads to trouble when one of the patients, a young woman suffering from amnesia, becomes infatuated with him. When the young woman suddenly disappears, along with the little swallow, Lucy is determined to find her. Spence joins in and the chase is on.
