Huguette Clark : The Mysterious Life of Huguette Clark

Huguette Clark was a reclusive heiress worth almost half a million dollars. Huguette Clark was the daughter of Senator William A Clark and Anna La Chapelle. Sen. Clark was married once before Anna and had four children that were Huguette's step siblings. She had an older sister who died in her teens. Huguette Clark married once, but the marriage was unsuccessful, ending after only two years. Huguette Clark didn't keep in touch even with her family. Before Huguette Clark died, she chose to live alone in a small yet very expensive hospital room. Distant relatives, her only living family, were barred from attending her funeral.

After Huguette Clark's death, the media began to uncover the three estates that were part of the Huguette Clark estate, homes that were left empty for decades. A huge art cache that Huguette had owned is going on tour before being auctioned off, the proceeds of which will go back into the Huguette Clark estate. Also, a huge antique doll collection worth over a million is part of the estate. As light was shed on the life of the reclusive Huguette Clark, questions about the treatment of Huguette Clark by her lawyer and accountant were raised. Legitimacy of Huguette Clark's wills is also in question and how the fortune will be divided up will now be decided by a judge unless an agreement can be reached.
